Comments: Early this spring 14 cars of a passing coal train derailed along side a major street in the neighboring suburb of Webster Groves, Missouri. The accident site, 14 cars turned over and coal everywhere, was shocking against the background of homes and neighbors. However, the greatest shock came from a community-wide realization that had this derailed train carried not coal but a hazardous and toxic material or, worse, nuclear waste, there would have been really terrible consequences. Please, please, find a site for nuclear waste that will not require transport through America's neighborhoods. Train derailments don't happen often but once is enough if the cargo kills. Thanks.
